Special Education Programs During the COVID Crisis

30 days of reopening in the fall to determine if any compensatory services are owed. It is a good idea for parents to keep a log of all the services missed and any regression that may be occurring.

5 The school district states that all timelines are waived during COVID. What does that mean? Will my child's IEP meeting be delayed?

Districts are not allowed to require you to waive any timelines. If the district asks you to do this, or to sign a meeting notice that includes this language, consult an attorney before signing. All timelines remain in effect, unless YOU waive them. Meetings are still required to be held, though they may be held via video conference. Evaluation dates are still in effect when schools re-open.

FAQ: Special Education Programs During the COVID Crisis

Many parents have the challenge of navigating these uncertain times with children in special education programs. My colleague Holly Vietzke-Lynch, Esq. is an attorney who handles these matters for her clients. Here is some very useful information Holly was kind enough to share with us:

1 Will there be special education services this fall if school is fully remote?

Yes. Schools are not exempt from their obligations to provide services to students on individual education programs (IEPs). Schools are required to provide each student with a remote learning plan that explains how services will be continue to be provided. It is important to note that parents do not have to accept the plan offered and are free to ask for alternate or additional services. For those students receiving summer services, the state directed that schools should use their "best efforts" to provide the highest-need students with in-person services whenever feasible. "Highest-need" students include those with substantial disabilities who have experienced substantial regression, those receiving multiple services, and students who need more support to successfully re-enter in the fall.

2 My child has sensory issues that causes difficulty wearing the mask for six hours per day. Will he or she be required to?

Students with health or sensory issues may be exempt from wearing the mask, and other precautions will be taken. Be sure to talk to your school's special education director if your child has health issues with wearing the mask.

3 If my child receives 1:1 services on his IEP, will he or she still be able to receive them?

Yes. If school is in-person, all special education services will continue as outlined in the IEP. If school is remote or hybrid, the 1:1 may have to be online in full or in part, subject to any guidelines or mandates from the Department of Elementary and Secondary Education (DESE).

4 My child did not get all of her services during the COVID school closures last spring and is now falling behind. Do I have any recourse?

You may. The federal Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) mandates that schools must make up for any services not provided for any reason. These are called compensatory services. Some states, like New Hampshire, are requiring all schools to hold an IEP meeting for each student within
